

God is for weaklings

We've heard it said that only weak people need God.

They want a "Supreme Being" they can lean on, so they create Him in their imagination and He becomes their psychological crutch.

But such an argument is self-defeating simply because all types of people - not only the weak - put their trust in God.

We constantly hear of strong minded people from every walk of life - scientists, soldiers, astronauts, housewives, business tycoons , etc, - who testify to having personal faith in God.

A classic example of course is the apostle, Paul who was a strong personality and not one to be easily led.

No one brainwashed him into being converted.

On the contrary, he was vehemently opposed to Christian teaching, "breathing out and threatenings and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord." Acts 9:1. Hardly a promising candidate for conversion!

Paul tells us himself what changed him.

It was simply a personal face to face encounter with Jesus Christ.

There's no other satisfactory explanation for the sudden redirection of his great energy.

There's no other way to account for his zeal in now promoting the very message he had just been opposing with ferocity.

By the way, don't worry if you're a weak individual. God is interested to do great things in your life too.
