

Love Letters

When my Grand Daughter and her husband were tidying up their shed and accrued possessions recently, a letter came to light that I had written to her over twenty years ago,

She was overseas at the time, travelling the world alone and having many adventures

In the letter I assured her of my love and support from the other side of the world and told her of my daily prayers for her safety and well being.

Today the art of letter writing is superseded. Instead we use texting, email, social media and telephone answering machines.

In our modern age we may not take time to write and thank people, or let them know we are supporting them emotionally through our prayers. The quick text grabs largely communicate events and circumstances without the feelings that could be communicated in a letter.

Although I myself rarely write letters these days, my granddaughter's rediscovered letter was a good reminder that I still need to communicate messages of love and support, reminding my children and their families that I pray for them daily.

There is, however, one love letter that does endure, though written centuries ago. It is God's love letter to us all in - the Bible.
