

Why create?

Why would the vast, eternal, all-knowing, almighty God create mere man – a small, frail, insignificant being?

And why would he put such store on what man does, or thinks or decides? Indeed, why would God care further about a creature who fails to perform as intended?

First, why do we ourselves create anything – lavishing time, skill and thought to make something that delights or intrigues us?

Second, what if our creation doesn't at first meet our expectations? We can refuse to be disappointed. We can make changes so that our original plan and design for our creation is achieved.

Third, what we create can't change or improve itself. It is utterly dependent on us to make any necessary changes or improvements.

Fourth, but what if some of our creations don't lend themselves to being altered or corrected? If they can't be remodelled or reshaped, we cast them aside. There is no alternative. Instead, we concentrate on perfecting those of our creations that can be changed.

Fifth, you are one of God's creations that he wants to change and bring to perfection. He won't force you. But he knows how to enrich your life beyond your wildest dreams.
